

Center School

May 29, 2014

Dear Parents and Guardians,

As we begin to look ahead to next year, I want to communicate a key change that will be taking place at Center School. The purpose of my communication is to provide you with an overview of the change, a rationale for the change, and how the change will positively affect students.

The Hopkinton School District, kindergarten through grade 8, is excited to move toward a co-teaching special education model. Co-teaching is a service delivery vehicle for providing students with services within the context of the general education classroom. This will encompass students receiving special education services as well those who may have received pullout reading services. Depending on the school and age level, the model may vary slightly; however, the goal of moving to a co-teaching model remains the same for all schools: ensuring improved student outcomes.

What will the co-teaching model look like at Center School? Next year, at Center School, there will be four co-teaching classrooms, two at each grade level. Working in partnership, a learning specialist and a classroom teacher as well as a reading specialist and a classroom teacher will share ownership of the students in a classroom and work together to effectively maximize learning for all students. The co-teachers will collaborate to make decisions, divide responsibilities to be efficient, and share accountability for their students' learning. Furthermore, the low student teacher ratio will benefit all students in the classroom. Students in a co-taught classroom, all students, will benefit from the expertise of two teachers delivering curriculum and instruction.

Next year in the co-teaching classrooms, the learning specialist will only be responsible for servicing students in the co-teaching classroom he/she is assigned to teach. The learning specialist will not be assigned to teach in multiple classrooms. As a result, the learning specialist's special education caseload will be between 6-8 students, the learning specialist will only need to co-plan with one teacher, manage only one classroom schedule, and will work to support all students in the classroom in partnership with the classroom teacher. This also applies to the reading specialist co-teaching. Again, all students will benefit from an outstanding student to teacher ratio and from having two teachers with complimentary skill sets.

Will all special education students receive special education services through the co-teaching service delivery model? No. In addition to the co-teaching model, Center School will continue with an inclusion service delivery model. At each grade level, there will be inclusion classrooms that are serviced by a learning specialist. This differs from co-teaching, as the learning specialist is providing services across multiple classrooms. Special education students in an inclusion classroom will be provided services as outlined on their Individualized Education Plans (IEPs). While the learning specialist is providing specialized instruction to students, a paraprofessional may be providing students' with accommodations in other inclusion classrooms.

The Director of Student Services, Marijane Hackett and Superintendent of Schools, Dr. MacLeod will present an overview to explain the philosophy behind co-teaching Tuesday, June 3, 7-9 PM at the High School Library and Wednesday June 4, 7-9 pm at the Middle School Library. These forums are intended to provide an opportunity to learn more about co-teaching and answer any questions you may have.

Center School is excited about this step toward moving to a co-teaching model. We believe the introduction of this model will benefit all students in the co-teaching classroom and provide all students with what they need to grow and learn. I am available if you have any questions, concerns, or ideas about the co-teaching model.

Respectfully,

Lauren Dubeau
